

How will studying at the University of Chicago satisfying your learning desires? What are your main academic aspirations? How can getting a degree from the University of Chicago help you with that?

Since I was a little girl, I remember being fascinated by languages. My parents had to travel a lot for work which is why we had an opportunity to live in different parts of the world. As a result of that, I was exposed to lots of different cultures and languages. What is more, it has helped me master a lot of them. When you master a new language, it opens a whole new world of possibilities for you. For instance, you are able to read literary works in the original language which helps you understand a book better. What is more, living in different parts of the world helps you broaden your horizons. Your cultural background becomes very rich. Even though it has sometimes been rather difficult to change countries of residence so often, I am forever grateful to my parents for giving me this experience. I would have been a totally different person if it was not for them.

I want to study Language and Literature at the University of Chicago because your educational institution offers one of the most comprehensive curricula. What is more, my sister is currently getting her degree here, and it is so refreshing to see how passionate she is about studies and how much she has already learned.

To be completely honest with you, I am not 100% certain where I am going to work when I graduate. Yet, what I know for sure is that I want to be employed in a field in which I will be able to use my knowledge of language and literature to the best of my ability. It is my goal, and studying at the University of Chicago is the first step I need to take to achieve that goal. I understand how challenging the studying process is at your educational institution.
